Make The Most Of Your Microwave

Microwave ovens can be great time-and-energy savers for busy cooks. Improvements in recent years include temperature probes that cook food by temperature instead of time; defrost, simmer, and hold cycles; and even microwave ovens that can be installed over the range in place of the vent hood.

But many people still rely on their microwave ovens only for occasional baked potatoes or reheated leftovers. With a little advance planning, and the use of built-in or accessory shelves, entire meals can be prepared in the microwave oven, in less time and with less clean-up than in a conventional oven. (The new "over-the-range" model, which GE calls the "Spacemaker" microwave oven, does not need the shelf.)

Diana Hansen, manager of Home Economics for General Electric and Hotpoint Ranges, suggests that the easiest menus include foods that need the same cooking time. Foods that cook at different rates should be added at different times. Generally, meat or larger amounts of food should be placed on the right side of the oven when cooking complete meals.

A quick microwave lunch could include a sandwich or hot dog and soup in its serving bowl heated at the same time. Hamburgers and baked beans can also share a microwave oven.

Next time you bake potatoes, Diana suggests baking the meatloaf in microwave also. Chicken or fish can be cooked in the microwave at the same time as the vegetables for dinner. And since baked apples are a natural for the microwave oven, include them next time you microwave a pre-cooked ham.

And don't forget breakfast. A hot, filling breakfast is only minutes away when you microwave scrambled eggs and bacon at the same time. Or try hot cereal and cocoa — a warm way to start the day without a lot of dishes to clean up.

To plan meals that will cook well in microwave ovens, Diana says you should keep in mind what doesn't cook efficiently or satisfactorily with microwave energy.

Foods requiring a large quantity of boiling water, such as spaghetti or rice, cook more efficiently on the range top. Casseroles to be heated in a microwave should be made with pre-cooked rice or pasta.

Angel food cakes, chiffon cakes and popovers won't bake properly in a microwave because they require dry heat to form their airy textures.

Pancakes won't crust in a microwave, although they reheat well. Popcorn is too dry to pop in a microwave unless you put it in a special popcorn accessory or use specially labeled "microwave popcorn".

And Diana warns that eggs in shells or shelled boiled eggs can burst and bottles with narrow necks can shatter if heated in a microwave.

So don't limit your oven to potatoes and leftovers. With a little imagination, you can microwave a meal from beginning to end.

Lawyers Sharpen Skills With Continuing Legal Education Programs

By Theodore I. Koskoff
President
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

Warren E. Burger, Chief Justice of the United States, has continually stated that "there is a poor quality performance by a substantial number of lawyers who come into our courts."

He recommends improving the accreditation process, fixing higher standards of professional excellence, and establishing programs for the training of trial advocates to remedy this situation.

T. I. Koskoff

More than 33 years ago, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America (ATLA) recognized the need for continuing legal education and devoted itself to honing the skills of courtroom advocates.

Each year ATLA's continuing legal education seminars, held in every Judicial Circuit in the United States, provide trial lawyers with a forum for new legal concepts and decisions. ATLA's basic Trial Advocacy Seminars teach courtroom strategy and effective presentation.

The National College of Advocacy and Advanced College lead trial advocates through all phases of civil and criminal litigation in seven-day seminars held annually. Conventions and special seminars in major cities across the nation also keep trial lawyers abreast of critical issues and new developments in the legal profession.

The National Board of Trial Advocacy (NBTA) was founded by ATLA in 1977 to improve trial advocacy by certifying lawyers of proven competence throughout the United States. NBTA, now sponsored by the American Board of Trial Advocates, the International Society of Barristers, the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, and the National District Attorneys Association, will hold its first certification exams in June, 1980. The American public will then be able to identify, for the first time, the trial lawyers who meet high national standards for civil and criminal trial advocacy.

Many lawyers take advantage of home study through educational counseling aids developed by ATLA, including videotapes, audio cassettes, and legal texts on all phases of trial advocacy.

The benefits of these continuing legal education programs are readily recognized by the consumer. These programs will make it possible for the legal profession to forge into the 80's with the excellent courtroom skills and outstanding knowledge of current legal topics that consumers rightfully demand.

FACTS & FIGURES

There are about 400 million telephones in the world, over 150 million of which are in the United States, the country with the greatest number: equivalent to 718 phones for every 1,000 Americans.

A good number of Americans have found that owning their own phone can save them a good bit of money. As of October 1977, the Federal courts ruled it permissible to own your telephone. Since that ruling, phones have changed! ITT's OWN-A-PHONE line has phones with built-in calculators, with alarm clocks, answering machines, and even racing stripes...Phones sold at retail stores match French Provincial, Early American and ultramodern decors.

For free information about phones, write ITT Personal Communications, Dept. N, 133 Terminal Avenue, Clark, NJ 07066.

Saving money on his phone bill might have seemed like a good idea to an innkeeper who, in 1975, received, because of "an arithmetical error," a phone bill for $4,386,800,000.

When consumers decide to self-treat, they choose an over-the-counter (OTC) product in approximately seven out of ten cases. Despite this wide use, consumer spending takes up only three cents out of each private health care dollar. Per capita consumer expenditures in 1978 amounted to less than $20, compared with about $56 for prescription drugs and about $146 for physician care in 1977.

The 1978 per person expenditure of $19.11 for over-the-counter medicines, say the experts at The Proprietary Association, trade association for the nonprescription medicines industry, represents only 30 cents of every $100 of disposable personal income.

A Game With Real Heart

Getting family members to talk to each other can make life more fun for all, but often there are conflicts that block real communication.

Hearing your family talk about their hopes and dreams can be an enriching experience.

One thoughtful mother, Mrs. Rhea Zakich, has invented a board game in which everyone wins. Its object is to create a safe situation for families and other people to share what really goes on in their lives.

Among other activities players take turns talking by answering questions they draw from a pile of cards.

No one else can speak or interrupt while that player is answering. The game is called Ungame, and can bring you closer to your children and your spouse.

It's a board game that at first glance resembles Monopoly, but it's actually a dynamic group activity whose rules encourage listening as well as sharing. To date, more than 500,000 sets have been sold.

Answers can be very provocative, revealing something really worth knowing about your family and friends and helps to create more fun and enjoyment. Available at local toy stores.
